Plants and trees have served mankind in various ways since life began on the earth. They have fed numerous mouths and cured diseases. Human beings are very much dependent on plants and trees for their survival besides feeding and protecting human life, they also protect soil from erosion, regulate atmosphere, maintain water supply for agriculture and prevent formation of deserts. Nature has taken millions of years to produce forests but man has been carelessly cutting down trees destroying forests for the shortsighted gains. Deforestation causes loss of soil fertility and soil erosion. The rapid destruction of forests in India, has caused much alarm in recent years. We should extend our helping hand to the government in making its scheme of Social Forestry and Afforestation- a success. Each individual should grow a tree. The Growth of forest development as an alternative source of energy and searching for wood substitutes are some of the long-term remedies for solving this problem.
